FOREWORD

We have great pleasure in bringing out the Practice Book that goes with the new English Coursebook for Std X, as part of the new curriculum. It provides the learners with plenty of opportunities to interact in English both orally and in writing. This in fact, is a logical extension to the Coursebook. It helps the learner use the language she/ he has learned in their own way; the tasks provided are so devised as to help the learner respond to communicative situations by using the language.

Teachers and parents may please note that the tasks in this book are to be done by the learners themselves with proper guidance on your parts. It will be very useful for teachers as well as parents to refer to the Teachers' Sourcebook, which forms a companion volume to the Coursebook and Practice Book. Please don't provide the learners with readymade answers of your own or the ones available in any market notes. Let the learners attempt them on their own. Once you build self-confidence in the learners to solve the problems by themselves with the adequate and timely help from you, they will start working by themselves in pairs and groups, as instructed in this book. Please remember that pair work and group work are of great importance in a language class.

A team which comprised practising teachers, teacher-educators and material producers has come together in producing this set of books. The SCERT thanks them for their effort. The team has benefited by the guidance offered by the academic faculty of the Central Institute of English and Foreign Languages, Hyderabad. The SCERT expresses its gratitude to them, especially Prof V Sasikumar, Mr K Rajeevan and Mr G Radhakrishna Pillai.

Creative criticism and suggestions for improvement of this book are most welcome.
